Subject: Re: Your Application for Chief Nap Enthusiast

Dear [Applicant's Name],

We hope this letter finds you well-rested and ready for a good laugh, because we've got some news for you. After careful consideration of your application for the position of Chief Nap Enthusiast, we regret to inform you that we will not be moving forward with your candidacy.

Let us start by saying that your dedication to the art of napping is truly impressive. Your extensive napping experience and your ability to sleep in any given situation are unmatched. Your knack for finding creative nap spots, from park benches to grocery store aisles, truly made us marvel.

However, after conducting a series of rigorous nap-related tests and simulations, we have come to the conclusion that your skills, while admirable, are not exactly what we are seeking for our organization.

Additionally, we must address your proposed initiative to introduce "Nap Tuesdays" in the workplace. While we understand the importance of employee well-being and the restorative power of naps, we feel obligated to inform you that our company culture revolves around productivity and an uninterrupted workflow. We worry that instituting a company-wide siesta might lead to a sharp increase in the usage of office supplies as makeshift pillows, resulting in a decline in overall efficiency.

We want to assure you that your commitment to napping does not go unnoticed, and we genuinely appreciate your interest in our company. We encourage you to continue pursuing your passion for napping, as there may be other opportunities better suited to your unique set of skills.

We wish you the best of luck in all your future endeavors and many blissful naps to come!

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
