

Student Support Email

Subject: You're Smarter Than You Think

Hey [Friend's Name],

I know this semester/year has been really tough academically, and I can see how frustrated you are with yourself. But I need you to step back and see the bigger picture for a moment.

Everyone learns differently and at their own pace. The fact that [subject] doesn't click immediately doesn't mean you're not smart enough - it just means you need to find your learning style. Some of the most successful people struggled in traditional academic settings.

Remember, grades don't define your intelligence or your future success. What matters is that you're trying, you're persistent, and you're not giving up. That resilience will serve you far better in life than perfect test scores ever could.

Have you considered reaching out to your professor during office hours or finding a study group? Sometimes a different explanation or approach can make everything click. And don't forget about tutoring services - using available resources isn't cheating, it's being smart about your education. You've got this, and more importantly, you've got people who believe in you no matter what your GPA says.

Keep pushing forward,

[Your Name]

Get more templates here:

<https://www.lettersandtemplates.com/letters/letter-of-encouragement-to-a-friend>